The strength of connection

This industry is built on trust. From the expertise behind a piece to the confidence of the person buying it, credibility sits at the heart of the gem and jewellery trade. But as consumer expectations, fashion, markets, and global trade shift, maintaining that trust requires adaptability—and, above all, people who care about doing things well. This issue explores the forces shaping jewellery today.

The Fall season, flowing almost seamlessly into the holidays, brings opportunity—but it also brings an increased risk of jewellery scams. In “The Currency of Credibility,” Karen Howard examines the growing threat of deceptive practices and the role jewellery professionals and appraisers can play in protecting consumers and preserving the trust on which the industry depends. In a marketplace where confidence is everything, transparency remains one of our most valuable tools. Howard brings a particular perspective to the conversation as a seasoned appraiser who has watched the industry through years of change.

Fashion, meanwhile, is creating new avenues for self-expression. In “The Fall/Winter Fashion Forecast,” Duvall O’Steen identifies the five key styles defining Fall/Winter 2026–27. For jewellery professionals, these trends offer fresh inspiration. They are also a reminder of the powerful relationship between fashion, design, and personal style. O’Steen’s outlook brings that relationship into focus, showing how jewellery is integral to self-expression.

Beyond the retail floor, the industry is also navigating a shifting global landscape. In “Forging Resilience,” the CJA’s Alanna Campbell brings together several experts from across the industry to offer clarity on how Canada’s jewellery sector is responding to tariffs, trade, and opportunity. The report considers upcoming challenges while also looking toward what is possible. If there is one quality that continues to define the Canadian jewellery industry, Campbell says, it is resilience.

And as the industry looks to the future, relationships remain essential. Our 2027 Buyers’ Guide brings together the companies that make Canada’s jewellery sector what it is, offering a practical resource for discovering suppliers, manufacturers, and dealers. In an industry built on collaboration, knowing who to call and who to trust is critical.

Together, these stories offer a snapshot of an industry adapting with purpose. The landscape may be changing, but the foundations remain the same: expertise, integrity, creativity, and relationships.

We hope this issue offers insight, inspiration, and even a little encouragement as we move into the season ahead.

Until next time—and until next year. ☺

Unparalleled Scintillation

The currency of credibility in the holiday season

When bad actors threaten the trade, radical transparency keeps real jewellers ahead

By Karen Howard

IMAGE GENERATED BY GEMINI

The holiday season is one of the brightest times of the year for the jewellery industry.

Engagement rings are being chosen. Diamond earrings are wrapped and placed under Christmas trees. Watches, coloured gemstones, and meaningful pieces of jewellery are purchased to celebrate the people who matter most.

For jewellers, designers, appraisers, and other jewellery professionals, it is traditionally one of the busiest—and most important—periods of the year.

Unfortunately, it is also prime season for jewellery scams.

Fake online sales, counterfeit luxury pieces, questionable marketplace listings, and misleading gemstone and diamond terminology compete for the same customers as legitimate jewellery businesses.

And that creates a problem for all of us.

When a consumer is deceived by one jewellery seller, they don't necessarily lose trust in that seller alone.

They may begin to question the entire industry.

That makes the holiday jewellery scam season more than a consumer problem. It is an industry problem.

We are no longer competing only with other jewellers

There was a time when a jewellery retailer's primary competition was the jewellery store across town.

That world has changed.

Today's consumer may compare a ring in a local jewellery store with one advertised by a major online retailer, a social media company, an auction platform, a private marketplace seller, and an unknown website—all within a matter of minutes.

To the trained eye, these businesses may be very different. To the consumer, they can look surprisingly similar. A professionally designed website does not prove professional expertise.

Beautiful photography does not prove that the jewellery pictured is the jewellery that will arrive. Thousands of social media followers do not guarantee that the person selling gemstones understands what they are selling. And the word "luxury" certainly does not make an item luxurious.

This is the environment in which legitimate jewellery professionals are now operating. We are no longer simply competing on merchandise.

We are competing on credibility.

The phrase “buy from someone you trust” may sound old-fashioned in an era of global e-commerce. It may, however, be more relevant than ever. Moreover, a retailer’s business model is not what creates trust. Behaviour does.

The problem with the incredible holiday sale

Discounting is hardly new to jewellery. Holiday promotions, Boxing Day sales, and special events have been part of retail for generations. But online marketing has taken the concept of the sale to another level.

Consumers are routinely presented with jewellery advertised at 50, 60, or even 80 per cent off an apparent original price. A ring supposedly “valued at $5,000” is available today for $899. A luxury bracelet is offered at a fraction of what an authorized retailer would charge. A diamond appears to be dramatically less expensive than comparable stones.

For legitimate jewellery businesses, these advertisements create an uncomfortable conversation. A customer walks into a store carrying their phone and asks: “Why is yours $3,000 when I can buy this one online for $900?” That question cannot always be answered by saying, “Ours is better.”

The industry needs to become better at explaining why two pieces of jewellery that appear similar in a photograph may be very different products.

Metal weight, manufacturing quality, gemstone quality, treatments, diamond grading, setting construction, after-sales service, warranties, and even the accuracy of the description can all influence price.

Rather than becoming frustrated with consumers who compare prices, we should recognize that comparison shopping is now part of the buying process.

Our job is to give them something meaningful to compare.

Counterfeit luxury is everyone’s problem

Counterfeit luxury jewellery and watches are not only a concern for major international brands.

They affect the entire secondary jewellery market.

Appraisers, estate jewellers, auction houses, pawnbrokers, and retailers buying pre-owned merchandise may all encounter pieces represented as genuine, branded jewellery.

An appraiser's responsibility is not to validate the customer's purchase decision. It is to report what the evidence supports. That distinction matters.

IMAGE GENERATED BY GEMINI

Some counterfeits are relatively easy for an experienced professional to recognize.

Others are becoming increasingly sophisticated. Packaging can be reproduced. Receipts can be fabricated. Serial numbers can be copied. Logos and hallmarks can be convincing. This makes one principle increasingly important:

We cannot authenticate a piece simply because the story accompanying it sounds believable.

For industry professionals, provenance and appropriate authentication procedures matter.

When we don't know, we need to be comfortable saying we don't know.

That may sound simple, but it is one of the most important professional habits we can develop.

Our clients do not expect us to know everything.

They should be able to expect us to know the limits of our expertise.

Diamond terminology: Words matter

The diamond industry has always had its own language.

Today, that language has become more complicated.

Natural diamonds, laboratory-grown diamonds, diamond simulants, treatments, grading reports, and a growing range of marketing terminology can be difficult for consumers to navigate.

Most people working professionally within the industry understand the differences.

Our customers may not.

That creates an obligation to communicate clearly. A laboratory-grown diamond is a diamond, but its origin is fundamentally different from that of a natural diamond. A diamond simulant may resemble a diamond, but is not a diamond. Those distinctions should not be hidden in fine print or buried in technical language.

Similarly, the term "certified diamond" continues to appear throughout jewellery advertising. But certified by whom? What does the document actually represent? Is it a laboratory grading report, an appraisal, a store-generated document, or something else entirely?

As professionals, we understand that these documents are not interchangeable.

Consumers frequently do not.

The solution is not simply more terminology.

It is better explanation.

If we expect consumers to trust our industry, the language we use must make products easier to understand, not easier to sell.

The marketplace jewellery challenge

Online marketplaces have created enormous opportunities for the jewellery trade.

Independent designers can reach international audiences. Antique dealers can connect extraordinary pieces with collectors around the world. Small businesses can operate without the overhead of traditional retail locations. But marketplaces have also blurred the line between professional seller and casual seller.

A listing might describe a piece as:

"Antique 18K diamond and sapphire ring."

For a jewellery professional, that description immediately creates questions.

How was the metal tested? How were the gemstones identified? What evidence supports the age attribution? Were treatments considered? Is the diamond weight known or estimated? Has the piece been altered? Does "antique" mean 100 years old—or does the seller simply mean that it belonged to someone's grandmother?

These are not insignificant details. They are the difference between a description and a professional conclusion.

When marketplace jewellery eventually arrives at an appraisal office, we may find ourselves delivering information the consumer was not expecting.

The "diamond" may be a simulant. The "natural sapphire" may require further testing. The "18K" item may not test as expected. The "antique" ring may be considerably younger than advertised. At that moment, the appraiser becomes more than the person identifying the jewellery. We become the person explaining why the consumer's understanding of their purchase does not match the evidence. Those conversations are rarely easy.

Appraisers are often where the problem finally appears Independent appraisers occupy an unusual position in the holiday jewellery ecosystem.

We often meet the customer after the sale has taken place.

They arrive excited.

They have found the perfect ring online.

They purchased a luxury piece through a marketplace. They found an unbelievable diamond deal. Now they want an appraisal for insurance. Then the examination begins.

Sometimes everything is exactly as represented. Sometimes it isn't.

This is where independence becomes critical. An appraiser's responsibility is not to validate the customer's purchase decision. It is to report what the evidence supports. That distinction matters. If the quality differs from the sales description, say so. If a gemstone requires additional testing, recommend it. If an attribution cannot be confirmed, do not present it as fact.

And if the consumer paid significantly more than expected for what they received, remember that our role is not to make them feel foolish. It is to provide clear, defensible information.

Trust is becoming a business advantage

The rise of questionable online sellers has created problems for the jewellery industry.

But it has also created an opportunity.

In a marketplace overflowing with information, trust becomes a competitive advantage.

The jeweller who spends five minutes explaining the differences between diamond types, the retailer who suggests a more affordable stone might better fit a customer's needs, and the appraiser who refuses to give unsupported conclusions—all are building trust.

The jeweller who takes five minutes to explain the difference between natural and laboratory-grown diamonds is building trust. The retailer who tells a customer that a less expensive stone may suit their needs better is building trust. The appraiser who refuses to make an unsupported conclusion is building trust.

The gemmologist who says, "I need additional testing before I can answer that," is building trust. And the salesperson who explains both the strengths and limitations of a product is building trust.

None of these actions may produce an immediate sale. But they build something much more valuable: Reputation.

Stop being afraid of consumer questions

Today's consumers have access to enormous amounts of information.

Some of it is excellent. Some is outdated. Some is misleading. And some is simply wrong.

A customer may walk into a jewellery store after watching several videos, reading online forums, and comparing dozens of products. That does not make them difficult. It makes them today's customer.

Instead of becoming defensive when someone asks why a diamond costs more, why two grading reports appear different, or whether a piece of jewellery is "really worth" the price, we should welcome the conversation.

Questions create opportunities to demonstrate expertise. But expertise must be communicated in a language the customer understands. Saying, "I've been in this business for 30 years," is not enough.

We need to show customers what those years of experience allow us to see that they may not see.

Buying from trusted jewellers

The phrase "buy from someone you trust" may sound old-fashioned in an era of global e-commerce.

It may, however, be more relevant than ever. Trusted does not have to mean traditional. A trusted jeweller might operate a century-old family store. They might run an online jewellery business. They might be an independent designer selling through a digital platform.

The business model is not what creates trust. Behaviour does. Trusted jewellery professionals provide clear descriptions. They answer reasonable questions. They disclose relevant information. They use terminology responsibly. They provide appropriate documentation. They explain their return and warranty policies. And most importantly, they remain accountable after the sale.

That last point deserves more attention.

The true test of a jewellery business is not always what happens when the customer pays.

It is what happens when the customer comes back with a question.

The industry has a choice

The holiday scam season is not going away.

If anything, Artificial Intelligence, increasingly sophisticated digital marketing, and global online marketplaces may make it harder for consumers to distinguish between established professionals and questionable sellers.

We cannot control every advertisement. We cannot eliminate every counterfeit. And we cannot prevent every misleading jewellery listing from appearing online.

What we can control is the standard we set within our own businesses. We can be precise with terminology. We can disclose what we know—and what we don't. We can educate rather than overwhelm. We can provide documentation that actually means something. We can encourage consumers to ask questions. And we can refuse to compete with questionable sellers by adopting questionable practices ourselves.

Because every time one consumer discovers that the jewellery they purchased was not what they believed it to be, another layer of trust is removed from our industry.

Rebuilding that trust belongs to all of us.

After the holiday rush

January inevitably arrives. The decorations come down. The sales end. And some of those holiday jewellery purchases will arrive in appraisal offices, repair departments, and jewellery stores. Most will hopefully represent exactly what the customer believed they purchased. Some will not.

Those pieces should remind us of something important. Our industry does not simply sell diamonds, gemstones, gold, watches, and jewellery.

We sell confidence in the information that accompanies them.

A beautiful piece may attract a customer. A competitive price may encourage them to buy. But neither guarantees that they will return.

Trust does.

During the busiest selling season of the year, that may be the most valuable product any jewellery professional has to offer.

And unlike the holiday discounts, trust should never have an expiry date. ☺

The Fall/Winter

fashion forecast

By Duvall O'Steen

The Fall fashion season is upon us, with consumers putting away summer attire and pulling out cozy favourites like sweaters and outerwear. As they update their wardrobes, key fashion trends will be driving purchase decisions for jewellery and accessories.

Here are five key trends from the Fall/Winter 2026-27 runways of New York, Paris, London, and Milan.

Dark Florals at Christian Dior Fall/Winter 2026-27, Spotlight Launchmetrics.

Neutrals, purple, pink, red

Neutrals continue to dominate the colour palette for ready-to-wear attire. Fashion designers in almost every market featured a bevy of colourless whites, subtle greys, beige, and classic black. Even repetitive patterned fabrics like checks, animal prints, and jacquard are muted in hue from deep browns to deep plum. Combinations of winter white and beige were seen at Bottega Veneta, Calvin Klein, Issey Miyake, Tory Burch, and Tod's. According to Harper's Bazaar, "White and beige layering transforms minimalism into a statement look."

Red was the standout colour for Spring/Summer collections, particularly in bright shades. For Fall/Winter, that crimson tide continues on a smaller scale, but with darker tints, seen in monochrome style at Givenchy, Chloë, Michael Kors, and more. Pink will also be a micro trend, seen at Chanel, Prada, Vaquera, as well as in bold fuchsia as featured at Balenciaga, Matières Fécales, and paired with red at Celine. Purple is also on the rise, with the deeper shades of the royal hue creating dramatic looks at Gucci, Loewe, Valentino, Ferragamo, Mugler, Tory Burch, and more.

Tanzanite and amethyst are obvious choices for accessorizing the deep plum and aubergine monochrome outfits. The purple gems wear well with pinks and fuchsia hues, as well. The deeper reds call for rubies and garnets. The beige and white ensembles signal a return to white metals. Expect requests for platinum, white gold, and silver chains. Suggest that clients opt for multi-colour pieces, which are trending among jewellery designers, to add some pizzazz to neutrals. When properly chosen, they can also be worn with some of the colour trends of the season, like purple, pink, and red. Layered necklaces are also a great way to add some zest to clothing in the neutral palette.

Asymmetry

Another trend that was seemingly ubiquitous was asymmetry. Trains, particularly those worn to one side, provided an off-centre style at Gabriela Hearst, Khaite, Loewe, Christian Dior, Chanel, Valentino, and more. High-low skirts are also making a return, seen at Alexander McQueen, Louis Vuitton, and Collina Strada, adding hemline asymmetry. One-shoulder blouses, dresses, or outerwear added dimension at Gucci, Givenchy, Moschino, Victoria Beckham, and Michael Kors. Side split skirts brought a lack of subtlety and balance to the legs at Valentino, Mugler, Jil Sander, and Roberto Cavalli. Designers even created a sense of elegant disharmony with colour, using colour blocking to shake things up. Marc Jacobs, Ulla Johnson, and Prabal Gurung paired mismatched hues to pleasing effect in their fall ensembles, creating just another way to bring in a lack of symmetry.

Jewellery tends to be symmetrical, so it is time to stock up on more designer options, like mismatched earrings, or to help clients asymmetrically style their looks.

In recent seasons, we have seen cuffs and bangles on both wrists, but for this trend, coach your clients to personalize one great stack on only one arm or to wear a big, bold cuff on the right arm if the long train is on the left. Long drop earrings or larger pendants on long cords are great to complement the outfits with trains, the high-low skirts, or the sweaters, coats, and wraps worn to one side. In fact, the pendant on a long cord has been one of the most prevalent jewellery trends on the runway this year. A statement ring can also pull the ensemble together, especially for more dramatic styles that cover the neck and arms. Given the lack of balance in the clothing, help clients choose a contemporary statement ring, perhaps something with a centre stone in an unusual cut/shape. For example, hexagon or octagon cuts or east-west marquise, as opposed to more traditional rounds, ovals, and emerald cuts.

Romantic vibes: Sheers, cut-outs, peplums

Romance was in the air and strutting down the runways in Fall/Winter collections. The peplum, with its nod back to former eras, has re-emerged as a prominent feature on suit jackets, blouses, and dresses, seen at Christian Dior, Alexander McQueen, Stella McCartney, Givenchy, and more. Sheer fabrics were also prevalent, as well as a peekaboo cut-outs dubbed "window dressing" by WhoWhatWear,² seen at Tom Ford, Prada, Erdem, Miu Miu, and The Row. Victoria Beckham, Chanel, Chloë, Simone Rocha, and Saint Laurent are just a few of the designers featuring see-through frocks, either in lacy looks or transparent fabrics such as Mylar, clear PVC, or structured mesh.

Oscar Heyman's cocktail ring featuring Danburite, yellow diamonds, and onyx in 18K gold. PICCHIOTTI's polka dot Xpandable bracelet with diamonds and onyx. Oscar Heyman's multicoloured spinel bracelet in platinum. PICCHIOTTI's Waves ring in 18K white gold and white diamonds. Lionheart's "Reign" white agate statement drop earrings.

These looks have a romantic vibe, with nostalgia like the drop waist, ruffles, and peplums. It's giving Victorian romance novel vibes, à la the recent Wuthering Heights movie, but with a contemporary edge.

These ensembles call for more minimal accessories, such as one statement piece as opposed to layering. Complement the charm of the ruffles and peplums with long earrings, either chandelier style or lengthy drops and shoulder dusters. Suggest that clients pair coloured gemstones with neutral options (the off-white laces and ruffled blouses, skirts, dresses), especially multicoloured pieces that offer great versatility for their fine jewellery wardrobe. For these looks in basic blacks, suggest white diamonds, black onyx, or a ruby cocktail ring, as rubies were deeply symbolic of passion and highly romantic in Victorian times.

Fall florals: Dark or 3D

Flowers are traditionally prominent in Spring/Summer fabrics, for obvious reasons. But surprisingly, many designers this year opted for florals in their Fall/Winter ensembles. These flower prints, however, have either a darker vibe, paired with black, for example, or a bold three-dimensional presence. Such dark floral fabrics were featured at Dries Van Noten, Roberto Cavalli, Carolina Herrera, Givenchy, and Michael Kors. Also, large 3D floral brooches or fabric applications were eye-catching at Chanel, Khaite, Christian Dior, and in statement necklaces at Saint Laurent.

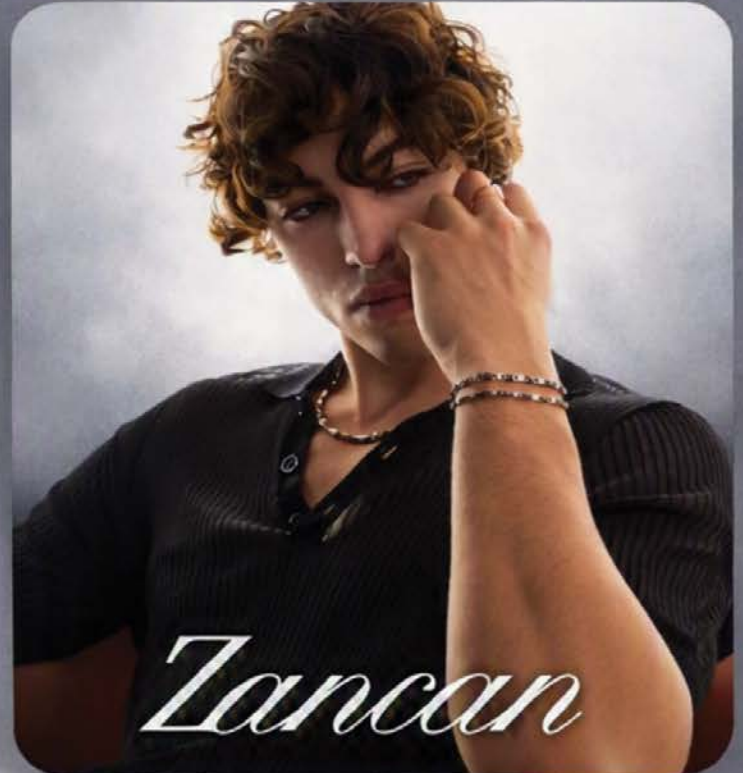

Such distinctive flower patterns can be accessorized with floral jewellery. Think brooches, necklaces, statement rings, or, for those who eschew matchy-matchy esthetics, consider pairing black or black-rhodium plated jewellery to accessorize with the black background floral prints. The large three-dimensional florals stand on their own, so consider pairing those with colourful gemstones like cocktail rings or chandelier earrings, or for these styles, consider longer, sleek diamond drop earrings.

Motion: Fringes, ruffles, trains

A sense of movement is also coming for the season ahead. Motion took the form of ruffles, fringe, and trains in both dresses and outerwear. Fringe was seen in many collections, including deconstructed (think ripped or tattered) fringe at Prada, Rick Owens, and Loewe. More elegant flouncy fringe was incorporated at Simone Rocha, Givenchy, Courrèges, Carolina Herrera, and Balenciaga. Ruffles will also be adding some flowy fun this season, seen at Gabriella Hearst, Chloé, Roberto Cavalli, Alaïa, Alberta Ferretti, Lanvin, and more.

Taking a cue from the beloved bridal gown, designers are also incorporating billowing trains into everyday outfits—added to pants, skirts, dresses, and coats, the look is kinetic and dramatic. Alexander McQueen added floor-length trains to bold jackets and dresses. Loewe featured one-sided trains on asymmetrical dresses. Chanel and Givenchy kept the train centred at the back and bottom of skirts and dresses. Michael Kors, Celine, and Khaite added their trains to pants.

Jewellery for such fluttering styles can either add to the movement or contrast it completely. For fringed fabrics, consider the popular fringe earring to add even more drama and motion. Or consider a singular earring that offers some dangles to augment the outfit without detracting from it. Another great way to accessorize fringe is with simple metallic options, like a stoneless ring, cuff bracelet, or some stackable bangle bracelets. Here again, a pendant necklace (this time on a shorter cord or chain) adds a sense of sophistication and simplicity to contrast the movement of the overall outfit.

Other notable trends include masculine or gender-balancing details, like button-up blouses, ties for women, or gender-blending outfits like suits with skirts. These call for streamlined accessories—think hoop earrings, power cuffs, and classic open-link chain necklaces. The plentiful faux furs seen in outerwear in many designer fall assortments call for a satin finish or textured gold. High collars or high neck looks also call for bigger jewellery and accessories, especially over-the-top (OTT) jewellery. Think bold collar necklaces and chokers (seen on the runway, from Roberto Cavalli and Chloé to Chanel), chunky pendants, and statement earrings (à la Saint Laurent runway styling).

Knowing the trends and being prepared with appropriate inventory will help retailers and sales associates to close more sales this autumn. Helping customers shine is the best way to encourage loyalty and repeat sales, as well as making sure they come back to you and your knowledgeable staff when it comes time for holiday gifting. 🍷

If 2026 has taught Canadians anything, it is to expect the unexpected. Unprecedented global events have presented new challenges and opportunities. While long-time alliances are being tested, new ones are being formed. The effects of political uncertainty, reflected in the price of gold, gas, and groceries, leave consumers wondering when relief will arrive. Technological advances continue to push the boundaries, and when implemented thoughtfully, can unlock meaningful benefits for businesses and consumers alike. For the Canadian jewellery industry, this is not the first time we have faced monumental challenges influenced by international affairs—and it certainly won't be the last. Fortunately, we are a resilient community and continue to evolve and survive in less-than-ideal times.

Political turmoil instigated by U.S. tariffs has strengthened Canada's focus on supporting Canadians and triggered the expansion of new international opportunities for economic growth. The State of Trade 2026 report notes that "exports to the U.S. dropped 3.7 per cent last year. But this was offset by an 11.1 per cent increase in exports to non-U.S. markets, which now account for 32.8 per cent—almost a third—of total Canadian exports, the highest amount in four decades. Last year was also the first year since 2013 that Foreign Direct Investments into Canada—valued at $93.0 billion—exceeded our Canadian investments abroad."¹

Change in nominal goods exports

Data on a balance of payments basis, seasonally adjusted data, averaged over three months to smooth volatility. The last data point is April 2026.

SOURCES: STATISTICS CANADA (TABLE 12-10-0011-01); GLOBAL AFFAIRS CANADA CALCULATIONS

Canada delivers value as a strong and dependable trade partner, now with “15 free trade agreements (FTAs) with 51 countries representing 61 per cent of global GDP.”² Canada has been working diligently to expand its trade agreement network, attract more foreign direct investment, provide support to Canadian exporters, and build trade infrastructure. Removing trade barriers allows Canadian businesses to “benefit from lower costs, reduced red tape, more customers worldwide and new suppliers and technology.”³

With Canada-U.S. trade already in decline since early 2025, apprehensive Canadians await news on the Canada-United States-Mexico Agreement (CUSMA) negotiations. At the time of writing in August 2026, “Canada-U.S. trade tensions escalated [over the] weekend after negotiations failed to produce a new agreement before a key deadline, triggering U.S. tariffs of 50 per cent on nearly $30 billion worth of Canadian exports.”⁴ Impacted products include some jewellery and precious metals, even CUSMA-compliant products. The Doane Grant Thornton report also detailed Prime Minister Mark Carney as saying, “Canada was unwilling to accept terms that would compromise national sovereignty or key industries, while U.S. officials argued Canada declined to finalize the deal. In response, Canada has suspended negotiations, recalled its negotiating team, and announced plans for dollar-for-dollar retaliatory tariffs targeting sectors including steel, dairy, appliances, pulp and paper, and electronics, with measures expected to take effect after Labour Day.”⁴

Discretionary spending has been reduced in the average Canadian household due to the elevated cost of everyday essentials. Many Canadians are “[worried] about how trade tensions and tariffs might affect prices and jobs. Bank of Canada surveys found people are delaying major purchases and focusing on essential items because they expect prices to rise.”⁵

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business (CFIB) notes that “the Iran-U.S. conflict pushed gasoline prices to a three-year high. While prices have eased from their peak, they remain well above pre-crisis levels and will take time to adjust.”⁶ A June 2026 Leger poll found that “72 per cent of Canadians report a negative impact on their personal finances from higher fuel prices. CFIB estimates fuel costs have increased by about $53 per vehicle per month [. . . which] translates to roughly $1.3 billion in additional fuel costs every month—money that is no longer available for other household purchases.”⁶

A seamless online and in-store retail experience has never been more important for jewellers. Jewellers who can optimize their online presence and build consumer trust will see the results in-store when the consumer is ready to buy.

For businesses, “higher fuel prices are increasing operating costs while also weakening consumer demand.”⁶ Canadian jewellers are now competing with basic living expenses for consumer dollars; a battle fought before with ingenuity and perseverance.

As often seen in uncertain times, gold remains strong. Retail Insider reports that “gold reached a new record in early 2026, with prices approaching $4,000 per ounce in Canadian dollars, reflecting a sharp rise over the past year and reinforcing its role as a hedge against economic uncertainty.”⁷ The price increase created significant affordability barriers resulting in a “sharp fall in gold jewellery imports, as customers reduced the frequency of purchases and shifted to lighter-weight pieces.”⁸ Silver also saw an increase “gaining momentum, supported by both investment demand and industrial usage.”⁷ Jewellers will need to navigate the new reality of gold jewellery and bullion being not only for “discretionary purchases, but also for stores of value.”⁷

As technology continues to become more powerful and accessible, businesses must adapt to remain relevant. Retail Insider also reports that “retailers are using virtual consultations and AI-driven tools to improve product discovery, while financing options such as buy now, pay later are helping to increase conversion rates. These developments reinforce the importance of omnichannel strategies that combine digital convenience with the trust and experience of physical retail.”⁷ Moneris highlights that “retailers who treat 2026 as a turning point, not a hurdle, will shape the next decade of Canadian commerce. The choices made this year about service, technology, pricing, and purpose will determine who earns trust in a market where trust is becoming the most valuable currency.”⁵

A seamless online and in-store retail experience has never been more important for jewellers. Deloitte reports that “while most shopping journeys begin online, about 80 per cent of purchases still happen in person.”⁵ A recent survey by KPMG found that “66 per cent of respondents prefer the in-store shopping experience, driven in part by a desire to physically ‘try out’ items before buying them; 26 per cent said they appreciate the speed at which they can get products in-store, and 57 per cent said they preferred in-store shopping because they were frustrated with the online experience.”⁹ Jewellers who can optimize their online presence and build consumer trust will see the results in-store when the consumer is ready to buy.

The Buy Canadian movement continues to dictate Canadian buying habits. Retail Insider reports that “consumers haven’t lost interest in shopping small: they’re just being more intentional about it. In fact, consumer preference for shopping at small businesses has nearly tripled compared to last year. People still want to support local businesses, but they need compelling reasons to do so.”¹⁰ Brand activations in the form of in-person events have helped to counter digital fatigue. Ellen

Bennett, founder of Hedley & Bennett, notes, “although the amount of time people report spending online has increased, [there has been] a shift in focus from online to offline and an increase in the number of events.”¹¹ Retail Insider notes that “businesses that stay visible, build authentic relationships both on and offline, and clearly communicate their value are much more likely to win those customers even in a price-conscious environment.”¹⁰

As technology continues to revolutionize our everyday lives, people remain a key component in the customer journey. A study by KPMG found that “90 per cent of respondents said they would return to a store where they’ve received exceptional service from knowledgeable staff.”⁹ Businesses can and should empower their staff with technology-enabled tools to manage inventory or to gain product knowledge; the key remains creating trust with consumers. Keen sales associates must quickly identify and adjust their sales presentation to suit the needs of their clients. “Retailers should recognize the generational differences in shopping preferences, with younger consumers being more comfortable with online shopping, while older demographics favour [a] traditional retail environment.”⁹

Consumer habits for discovery on the internet have changed from a traditional search to a question posed to AI. In a McKinsey study, “73 per cent of respondents said they used AI to learn more about brands and products, 61 per cent used it to compare products and services, and 57 per cent used it to get personal recommendations.”¹¹ For retailers, AI “offers the power to unlock efficiencies and forge deeper customer connections. Those retailers who seize AI’s full potential are likely to be those who blend technological ingenuity with human intuition, with the aim of creating a future where businesses can be both smarter and more resilient,” says Duleep Rodrigo, head of Consumer & Retail, KPMG.¹³

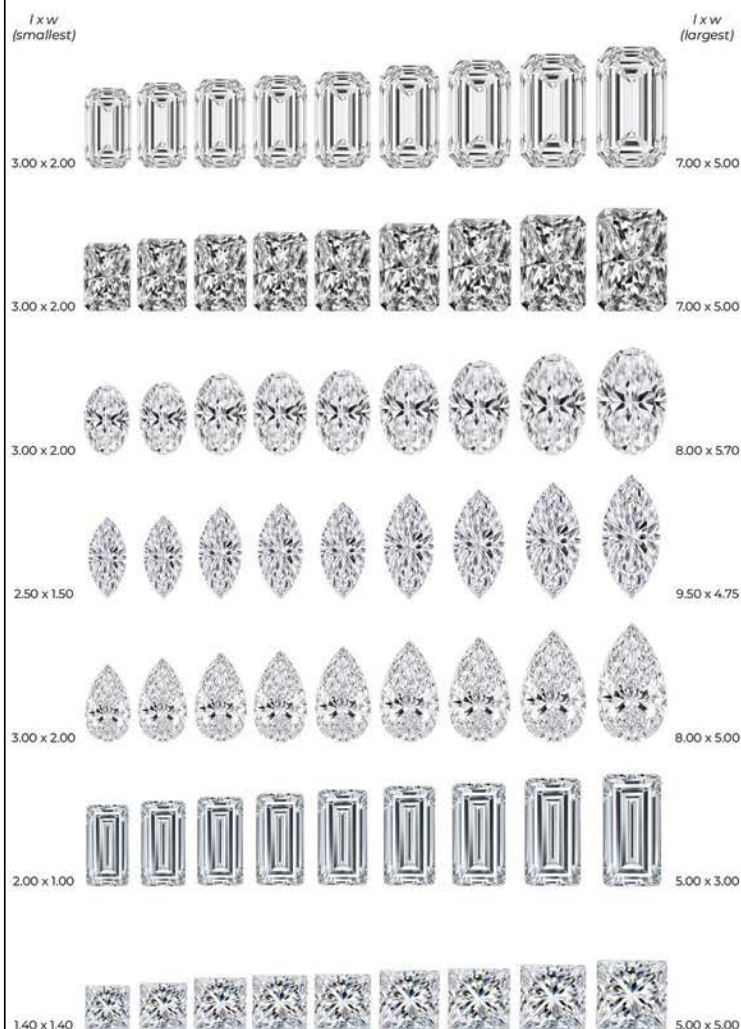

Social media has become the “front door” for discovery while playing an essential role in establishing trust with a business. Business owners across Canada are finding themselves becoming “creators.” Content plays an important role “to bring in customers, to drive sales and to keep the customers coming back who already love them.”¹⁰ This year has seen a shift in social media with an emphasis on brands being approachable and unpretentious. “2026 is the year of the normal person,” says Grace Clarke, a marketing and brand strategy expert, and Shopify’s former head of community marketing. “Brands are finding more ways to engage with real people in a genuine way. It’s about finding ways to encourage your community to talk about the products, sort of optimizing for the group chat and not the public Instagram story.”¹¹ Jewellery content creators can stand out by “thinking less like advertisers and more like publishers. Show your personality, educate your audience, share customer stories, and create content consistently. People want to see authentic stories, products in action, behind-the-scenes content, and recommendations they can trust.”¹⁰

Engagement isn’t limited to post likes and shares; the comment section is becoming an integral part of the marketing strategy. Clarke notes that “right now, consumers, more than ever, are participating in marketing. You see this in people commenting on advertisements.”¹¹ A Brightlocal survey found that “89 per cent of customers are more likely to want to make a purchase because they feel considered and heard,”¹¹ highlighting the importance of responding to messages, whether they are positive or negative. “It’s essential to moderate and manage customer comments and develop a new rhythm for content generation that is readable by agent-based search engines. [Generative Engine Optimization] GEO is a key battleground for winning back customers.”¹⁴

For the busy business owner, AI technology has come to the rescue. “AI can also help streamline content creation, making it easier for even the smallest teams to maintain a strong presence.”¹⁰ The benefits don’t stop at content creation; AI can be used for merchandising, customer experience, and productivity. The value for retailers is enhanced customer experience with personalized marketing. “Instead of random product suggestions, retailers can utilize gen AI to analyze customer preferences and shopping behaviors to anticipate customer product restock needs and make more accurate product suggestions.”¹⁵

To be successful, retailers must find their purpose, build AI readiness throughout the company, launch pilot projects with measurable return on investment (ROI), and prioritize responsible AI and compliance.”¹⁵ Isabelle Allen, global head of Consumer, Retail and Leisure, states that retailers must “rethink how they design customer journeys, manage inventory, set prices, and engage consumers. AI in retail is both the great leveler and the ultimate differentiator: it promises to democratize access to innovation yet rewards those bold enough to reinvent their business from the ground up.”¹² For jewellers, our superpower is not fulfilling need, it’s creating desire and turning desire into need, something AI has yet to learn how to do.¹⁶

Crime continues to impact the Canadian jewellery industry. According to Jewellers Vigilance Canada's (JVC's) 2025 Annual Crime Report, "the total number of jewellery crimes recorded increased from 201 in 2024 to 233 in 2025, a 16 per cent increase. Total dollar losses increased by 62 per cent to $44,076,000 in 2025, up from $27,131,000 in 2024. Sustained high gold values and an escalating pattern of high-value robbery events are significant contributing factors."¹⁷

The JVC report highlights observations made between 2020 and 2025, noting that:

- Robbery as a percentage of total events and total dollar losses continues to increase, reaching its highest level in the five-year dataset.
- Break-and-enters increased significantly in 2025, reversing a multi-year flat trend and representing a growing concern for the industry.
- Thefts declined sharply in 2025 in both volume and total loss value, though average loss per event increased, indicating fewer but higher-value incidents.
- Fraud remains low in reported volume but continues to be under-reported, particularly cyber-related fraud events.
- Ontario, and specifically the Greater Toronto Area, remained the dominant location for robbery events in 2025.
- Firearms continue to be used or displayed in a significant number of incidents, and 2025 saw multiple events where shots were fired, resulting in injury.
- Smash-and-grab robberies remain the most prevalent type, typically involving organized groups targeting retail locations.

2026 has also seen its fair share of updates from FINTRAC regarding Anti-Money Laundering (AML) compliance for jewellers. The compliance experts at Outlier explain FINTRAC's "higher expectations for compliance programs, which must be reasonably designed, risk-based, and effective, leaving more room for Canada's AML regulator FINTRAC Review to assess deficiencies."¹⁸ FINTRAC has expanded oversight, examination, and enforcement powers. Its most recent annual report indicates that assessment instruments like the Supervisory Risk

Businesses can and should empower their staff with technology-enabled tools to manage inventory or to gain product knowledge; the key remains creating trust with consumers. Keen sales associates must quickly identify and adjust their sales presentation to suit the needs of their clients.

Assessment Questionnaire (SRAQ) are more common than examinations. Jewellers need to understand and respond to these types of requests from FINTRAC, as a failure to do so may result in penalties. As of March 2026, "there are significantly higher administrative monetary penalties (AMPs) for non-compliance (the maximum penalties are now 40 times previous levels, with a cap of the higher of $30 million or three per cent of global revenue). Fortunately, FINTRAC is also required to assess reporting entities' ability to pay as part of their penalty calculations."¹⁸ In addition to ongoing updates to existing compliance programs, jewellers will need to prepare for universal enrollment, which will be required for all reporting entities. The final format is not yet known, but the Canadian Jewellers Association (CJA) will continue to monitor requirements and engage with policymakers on behalf of jewellers.

As the world continues to react to the changing political and technological landscape, jewellers continue to find ways to persevere and meet ever-changing consumer demands. The need for seamless integration between online and in-store experience means jewellers must take advantage of technology that connects consumer data, inventory, and marketing into one streamlined ecosystem. AI presents new opportunities for personalization and product discovery for consumers while allowing jewellers to optimize their workflows. Businesses that can successfully integrate the latest technology while providing the personalized approach jewellers are known for will come out on top in these uncertain times. 🌐

October: A month to learn, connect, and celebrate

October brings an exceptional series of opportunities for Canada's jewellery community to learn, connect, and celebrate. As the industry prepares for its busiest season, it is also a time to step away from the day-to-day, exchange ideas, build meaningful relationships, and invest in the future of our profession.

This month, two important events offer precisely that opportunity.

On Tuesday, October 13, 2026, Jewellers Vigilance Canada, in partnership with Jewelers Mutual, will host the 4th Annual JVC Security Summit at the York Regional Police Association headquarters. This one-day event offers jewellery professionals a valuable opportunity to speak directly with police and jewellery security experts.

Featuring five focused topics presented by York Regional Police and loss prevention experts, the Summit will explore practical security best practices to help protect businesses, teams, and customers. The day begins with a continental breakfast, followed by educational sessions, lunch, and opportunities to connect with police, security professionals, and exhibitors during the vendor showcase.

Then, on Monday, October 26, 2026, the spotlight turns to one of the most anticipated gatherings of the year: the CJA Industry Summit at the Fairmont Royal York in Toronto.

Few venues could better reflect the prestige of this occasion. With its celebrated history, luxurious amenities, exceptional hospitality, and unmistakable elegance, the Fairmont Royal York provides a fitting setting for an exclusive gathering of Canada's jewellery community.

At the heart of the Summit is an exceptional lineup of keynote speakers: Dr. Jody Carrington and Dan Olsen. Bringing diverse expertise and perspectives to the stage, they will challenge ideas, inspire new thinking, and offer valuable insights to help professionals grow, adapt, and seize new opportunities.

Yet, the Summit is about more than what happens on stage. It is about being in the room.

Throughout the day, attendees will have opportunities to reconnect with industry friends, meet new colleagues, exchange experiences, and build meaningful relationships. From conversations between sessions to shared meals and dedicated networking opportunities, the Summit creates the time and space for genuine connections to develop.

This is what makes the CJA Industry Summit distinctive: an exclusive gathering created specifically for the Canadian jewellery community, bringing together the businesses, leaders, professionals, and minds shaping our industry's future.

We are proud to welcome our valued sponsors, Jewelers Mutual, Citizen, and Paris Jewellers, whose support helps make this year's experience possible. For those travelling to Toronto, special discounts are also available through Air Canada, Porter, and WestJet. Visit the CJA website for travel details, discount information, and registration.

And when the day's program concludes, the celebration continues.

The CJA Awards Dinner begins with an elegant cocktail hour, offering another opportunity to network, reconnect, and enjoy the company of fellow jewellery professionals. The evening continues with the CJA Awards Ceremony, honouring the remarkable individuals and businesses whose leadership, craftsmanship, innovation, dedication, and vision continue to elevate Canadian jewellery.

Guests will enjoy a three-course meal, refined wines and beverages, and much more, with special moments and surprises throughout the evening.

Be sure to secure your ticket for the Industry Summit and your ticket for the CJA Awards Dinner through the CJA website. Whether you join us for the day, the gala, or both, we invite you to make the most of this exceptional opportunity to learn, connect, and celebrate.

At its heart, the CJA Industry Summit is a celebration of Canada and the people who build, create, lead, and innovate here. It is a place for Canadian businesses and Canadian minds to come together, share knowledge, support one another, and celebrate the industry we are proud to call our own.

As we enter the holiday season, let us continue to buy Canadian, support Canadian businesses, and celebrate the remarkable talent within our communities.

This October, come for the knowledge, stay for the connections, and raise a glass to the people who make Canadian jewellery extraordinary.

Together, let's celebrate our industry, our community, and Canada. 🍷

The future of the bench depends on all of us.

Bench jewellers are the backbone of our industry—and the talent pipeline is shrinking.

That's why Jewelers Mutual has made a historic $10 million, 10-year investment with the Savannah College of Art and Design (SCAD) to strengthen bench jeweller education through scholarships, modern training, and real-world career pathways.

A little romance, a little charm. These sterling silver statement earrings, from Hillberg & Berk, a Canadian and women-owned business, put a fresh spin on the classic heart, pairing two connected hearts for movement and dimension. Intricate floral etching adds texture and a handcrafted feel, while the generous 60 mm (2.3 in.) length gives the design plenty of presence. Despite their bold scale, they are lightweight enough for comfortable wear. Finished with classic post-and-butterfly backs, these earrings strike an easy balance between bold and refined, made for both a special occasion and a walk in the park. 🌿
